

ART AND DESIGN EDUCATION

The BFA and BFA/MA degrees prepare students to approach teaching as a creative process modeled upon and nourished by intensive studio preparation in a contemporary art context. Students engage in fieldwork and student teaching experiences that help them integrate their studio work, studies in liberal arts, education theory, and teaching practice. Throughout their teaching experiences in K-12 schools and community-based educational settings, students:

- provide holistic studio learning opportunities for young people;
- value young people's social and cultural assets; and connect to young people's families and communities.

Upon graduation, students become proficient in their written and spoken communication about contemporary art and design practices as they begin to advocate for studio-based art and design programs in diverse learning contexts.
