

ASSOCIATE DEGREE PROGRAMS

Pratt's Associate Degree Programs offers an exciting educational opportunity to traditional and nontraditional students through two-year Art and Design degree programs. These programs allow students to immerse themselves in an intensive two-year, career-track associate of occupational studies (AOS) or transfer-track associate of applied science (AAS) education.

Located in Manhattan, at the center of the art and design community, students have immediate access to the world's leading design studios, museums, and galleries. This sophisticated location provides excellent opportunities for field trips, guest speakers, and internship placement. Location, opportunity, and diversity—with students of varied ages from across the country and around the world—combine to create a unique educational experience.

The faculty members, which include some of New York's leading artists and designers, bring a combination of expertise and dedication to the classroom. They work diligently to provide students with professional experience and to inspire the confidence students require to continue their education or pursue their chosen careers. Class sizes are small and faculty members work closely with each student, helping to refine and build their skills to a professionally competitive level.

In all majors, there is a strong emphasis on teaching traditional skills and a commitment to providing students with access to the most advanced technology. The curriculum begins with rigorous foundation courses for all majors, followed by major-specific upper-level courses, and culminates in professional portfolio development, internship opportunities, and capstone projects.
